

cha-ching or choco-ching?

Shockingly, today, on the 31st of January a local, poor, young boy, Charlie Bucket, found the key to a life time supply of chocolate- the last golden ticket from his hero the wondrous, wonderful Willy Wonka! The miracle occurred at the local news agent in London, England. Charlie explained "I was just walking along the street, then to my surprise, a £5 note floated into my hands so as every poor boy does, I went to get so food. As I picked up the fudge-marshmallow-surprise, to my astonishment the golden ticket was there waiting for me!"

In comparison to the other winners, Charlie's personality was the most selfless. Augustus Gloop's reaction was just to eat more chocolate, regardless to what any one else thought. Veruca Salt only wanted another pony as soon as she had the golden ticket in her hands. Violet Beauregard only wanted the golden ticket so she could win the competition at the end and Mike Teevee seem disinterested meanwhile Charlie Bucket, the final golden ticket winner was most grateful for what he discovered.

Unfortunately, the Bucket family lives in a one room house and only one meal a day which is only watery cabbage soup. They have no roof so when the rain comes down their tears do too. When it snows then their tears freeze into their blank faces. Charlie has two sickly grandmas and two sleepy granddads who share the only bed in their crooked house while Charlie, his mum and dad sleep on the damp, wet soil. Sadly, Charlie's mother is out of work and his father got fired for the toothpaste capping company. Now, Charlie and his help them now is the golden ticket.

Charlie's life changing opportunity happened from a little friend called the wind. Charlie was out on his winter stroll past Willy Wonka's chocolate factory, while a gust of air flew past his little white face. Then suddenly, an emerald green object brushed his crystallised face and then gently floated in to his small hands- it was a £5 note! Immediately, he ran to the nearest news agent, where he picked up the first chocolate bar in sight, a fudge-marshmallow-surprise! While the shop keeper chatted behind the counter, Charlie ripped back the glistening wrapper. Just at that moment... something shimmered in his hands. Then just as he guess it would, the last golden ticket! As it was dazzling in his hands a strange man came up to Charlie said "I'll give £50 for that ticket, and a nice, new bike!" Let alone the man's offer, a woman by offering £500! Lucky, the shopkeeper, who was on Charlie's side, told him not to give the ticket to anyone. Charlie, as following the shopkeeper advice, dashed home to tell his parents about the piece of paper that will change their lives.

As soon as Charlie's tired parents heard his little voice, shouting happily, they to the room (they had just been in the garden.) to see what he had discovered. Out of breath, Charlie shouted at the top of his voice, "Mum, dad I've done it! I've found the last golden ticket! It's ours!" Grandpa Joe, the oldest, just made out what the ticket said and with every ounce of joy left in him, he jumped up and screamed "YIPPIE!!!" Breaking Grandpa Joe's heart, Charlie announced "I'm not going. Someone offer £500 for this ticket. We need the money more chocolate. I am doing this for all of you." Grandpa Joe's face saddens as he sank into his bed. Grandma Josephine still had a gleam in her and called Charlie over and told him that money get printed every day but there are only 5 of these golden tickets and you have one of them. So go live your life, not looking after us, but after you. Charlie smiling agreed with Grandma Josephine and took Grandpa Joe on the adventure of their lives.

So the fifth golden ticket has been found but is it a fake? The world still waits as these five lucky prize winners enter the golden gates of Wonka's secret factory. What will the final prize be and who will win?
