

Bucket of Luck

As Wonkers competition has finally come to an end, Charlie Bucket has discovered the last golden ticket! This poor school boy last afternoon found an ice cold dollar bill flapping around from the wind in the pure pale snow in London, England. As a result Charlie bought one last Wonker bar and it was just his luck!

Charlie Bucket is a cheerful, pleasant boy who shares a cramped, modest cottage in London with his four elderly grand parents and his thoughtful, loving parents. Recently, Mr. Bucket was fired from the Toothpaste factory where he worked. As a result his family has no more money so he was over the moon to find the last golden ticket.

Hurriedly the excited, cheerful boy entered the shop, while opening the delicious chocolate bar. All of a sudden, he froze. The beautiful, burnished, gleaming ticket was glowing through the chocolate wrapper. Rapidly Charlie sprinted back to his overcrowded house, clutching the golden twinkling ticket in his blistered hands (from doing the house work) shouting "I've got it...I've found the last golden ticket!" reported Mrs Bucket. Charlie has reported that when he unravelled the wrapper two eyewitnesses offered him money. One eyewitness offered him £50.00 and a new bike whilst the other eyewitness offered him £500.00! Apparently, when Charlie got home, he was willing to sell the ticket for money for his family. However his granddad Joe convinced him not to sell it and go on this once in a life time opportunity which he will do on the first of January(1936).

Tomorrow is the first of January when all the ticket winners will gather together outside Willy Wonka's factory. However everyone is wondering who will these five lucky winners take with them?
