

BUCKET FULL OF LUCK

Young Charlie Bucket, an incredibly poor boy from London, England, has officially concluded the famous choccy chase, putting the chaos to a sudden end.

Surprisingly, unlike all of the other lucky winners, Charlie got his golden ticket by amazing luck. On 31st January, 1997, Charlie Bucket found a mucky pound in the gruesome gutter, of a London street. Completely by luck, he speedily sprinted into the nearest chocolate selling shop - as his family, that was so penniless, couldn't afford to give him, a young growing lad, the nutrition he needed, and eagerly grabbed himself a wonderful, Wonka's Whipple Scrumptious Fudge Mallow Delight, and quickly opened it. Eagerly, he tore open the glimmering wrapper, and to his delight, he found that a sparkling, dash of pure golden paper, was glinting in the evening sun, like a comet tail, soaring down to earth (as Charlie described it) Charlie was stunned. He never imagined that a poor boy like him would get such a golden opportunity.

As soon as the shopkeeper saw the superb ticket, he quoted, "You've found Wonka's last golden ticket, in my shop too!" Other witnesses, Susan Graham, 46, and Peter Smith, 57, both tried trading the precious ticket, offering £50 and a new bike – Peter, or £500 – Susan. Totally gob smacked, Charlie bravely rejected the offers (with some Gentle encouragement from the kind, watching shopkeeper) and was told to quickly sprint home and not to stop for anybody.

Beaming, Charlie rushed rapidly into his crumbling cottage, and screamed loudly, "MUM! DAD! I'VE FOUND WONKA'S LAST GOLDEN TICKET!" Surprised, Charlie's parents hurried into the room, and slowly drank in the news. Grandpa Joe, who was ecstatic, and apparently, has not stood up out of his battered bed for over 20 years, enthusiastically jumped out of it and did a victory jig, whilst shouting, "YIPEE!"

Consequently, everyone was very surprised.

The previous, auspicious winners were, the chubby chocolate munching monster (so quoted by a source that remains anonymous) Augustus Gloop, from Dusseldorf, Germany, who got his ticket by eating so much chocolate, and his mum stated, "He eats so many chocolate bars a day, it was impossible for him not to find one!" The so called barbaric brat, Veruca Salt, from Buckinghamshire, England, who after calmly appreciating the ticket, demanded, "Daddy, I want another pony!" The sporty, gum chewing phenomenon, Violet Beauregard, who lives in Atlanta, Georgia, USA, confidently recalled, "I'm a winner!" the TV and computer crazy Mike Tevee, who's home is in Denver, Colorado, USA, mentioned in his interview, "I only had one bar of chocolate, I don't know what it tasted like, I hate chocolate!" Finally, there is the kind, loving Charlie Bucket, from London, England, who caringly recited, "We need money more than chocolate."

Charlie quoted this sentence because his family is so impoverished, that he thought his family would want to sell his precious ticket, so they could get money, and they 'needed money more than chocolate.' When Charlie's flabbergasted Grandpa Joe heard this, he exclaimed, "Only a dummy would give this up for money, are you a dummy?" This made Charlie's mind up, and he decided to go to the factory after all.

A final quote from Shannon Kernick, 6EH, stated, "A good job and all that Charlie went to that factory too! I wouldn't miss an opportunity like that!"
